Council for the Advancement of Nursing Science is pleased to present its first program on PROMOTING RESEARCH INTENSIVE ENVIRONMENTS. This program is targeted toward deans and directors of research in schools and colleges of nursing, directors of pre- and post-doctoral training programs, directors of research centers, and all investigators interested in enhancing their research environments. The program speakers, panelists, and breakout session facilitators bring a wealth of experience representing schools of nursing from across the country. Collectively they hold key roles as current or past directors of 7 pre/post doctoral training programs, 11 research centers, and various administrative positions (deans, associate deans for research, and department chairs) central to supporting research within their schools of nursing. The content covered will address issues of concern to those wishing to develop research centers, advanced research training programs, and/or other mechanisms to increase research activity, as well as issues of concern to those with one or more of these already in place at their schools.
